Remote Deposit Capture - Scam Warning

Check scams have been circulating for years, and now, consumers are seeing a new version of this involving mobile deposits. To protect you and your accounts, we want to ensure you are informed about this. Here are a few examples of common scams that lead to remote deposit capture fraud:

Romance scam: The con begins when the scammer creates a fake profile, often using stolen photos, posing as a great-looking, caring, and sensitive person just searching for their soul mate. This person is a professional scammer, not a true love. The scammer tells the victim many things the victim wants to hear, confesses their love very quickly, and then suddenly needs financial assistance.

Job scam: Many work-from-home scams start online and end with your account in the negative. It starts with advertisements for jobs that do not exist, like mystery shopper or car wrap advertising. These jobs usually involve a deposit to the account, and the member is instructed to send a portion of the funds elsewhere.

Loan scam: Fraudulent online loan scams are similar to job scams. Advertisement for loans that are not legitimate can lead to a victim providing personal and account information which gives the scammer access to the victim's account.

Easy money: Quick, easy money appeals to almost everyone, right?! This typically involves a friend of a friend on Facebook and an opportunity to make quick, easy cash by simply allowing funds to be deposited and then withdrawn from the member's account.

Each scenario typically ends with the member giving account access to the scammer. With this information, the scammer can make deposits through the mobile deposit function. Once the funds have been released for availability, the scammer will instruct the victim to send funds to himself or a third party. Later, the check will bounce, and scammers know that if they can trick you into depositing into your account, you will be responsible for the loss. Remember the adages: "There is no free lunch in life" and "It sounds too good to be true." If someone promises you free money, it's not free. And if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. So don't give out personal or banking information to people you meet online – it only gives them a way to steal from you.
